Mr. Garrett's Gift to King Humbert

From a Special Letter to American Express (Paris).

I have to record one of the most generous acts ever performed by an American citizen in aid of the oppressed people of Europe. I refer to the presentation of the beautiful horse, Damascus, by John W. Garrett, of Baltimore, to the King of Italy. The history of this transaction has been narrated by the press, and I have been able to learn something of the details of the gift.

It seems that when Mr. Garrett was on a visit to Italy he saw the stables of the King. Not long before that time, in an article in the "Herald," the sculptor Sardi had stated the difficulty of obtaining a good horse as a model for sculpture; that it was almost impossible to find one free from imperfections of form. Mr. Garrett, who had been in Italy for some time, having been there on business, was in a position to procure the most perfect horse, in form and proportion, he had ever seen. When Mr. Sardi had conceived the idea of the statue of the great benefactor of Italy, Mr. Garrett very frankly said that he would sell the horse, but if the King would accept it as a gift, he would gladly send him to the King. It was a thing altogether new to the King. It was a thing altogether new to the King. It was a thing altogether new to the King.

A "Mistake" Perpetrated

Coming down the street from the Hotel, the other day, a man about fifty years old, neatly dressed, white shirt, red tie, and a pair of black trousers, was walking along. He was a man of a fine, intelligent-looking face, and he was walking with a steady, confident stride. He was a man of a fine, intelligent-looking face, and he was walking with a steady, confident stride.

Read the Following, From the "San Francisco

Journal of Commerce :
"The firm of R. F. Briggs & Co. have their factory at Amesbury, Mass. It occupies four large buildings, and is situated on a level of ground. The first large building, 120x25 feet, is the factory for seats, cushions, and gear. It contains all the latest improved machinery for producing all the different parts that go to make up carriages and all other kinds of vehicles. Of the second, a brick building, 100x20 feet, the first floor is occupied by the harness shop, where there are ten daily harness makers. All the harnesses are made here. The second department is used as a landing and storage room. The third floor is the third and fourth—used for storing and repairing and painting of bodies, and for varnishing trunks. The third brick structure—two stories high—is a good building, and is used for the storage of harnesses. The fourth and last three-story building, 80x25 feet, is the section devoted to painting the bodies, the setting and assembling blacksmithing. This factory is complete in every part. It employs over 100 men and 100 horses in the different departments, and can turn out 2,000 per year, or more, of some forty different styles of vehicles, from the very best material. The spoked wheels are made from the best second-growth white oak, while the hubs are made from the best iron, white and yellow elm. All their work is done in the factory, and is of the highest quality. The factory is situated in a healthy and pleasant location, and with the facilities and experience of twenty years the proprietors are enabled to produce in quality and finish as fine a carriage for the money as can be found in the United States. In one visit a few days ago to the factory, in 1883, we found a complete stock of carriages and harnesses, and new goods arriving and on the way, all of which are especially made with a view to standing the climate of the Pacific Coast.
